Reassigning gender as a solution to gender imbalance and sexism in the military. Subject 7.

Author: Earth Force Department of Advanced Biological and Behavioral Research

Abstract: Despite efforts to recruit more females to Earth Force, gender disparity remains extreme with only 18.2% of active service members identifying as female (Earth Force, 2057). Research shows that gender disparity contributes to a pervasive culture of sexism within the ranks (Collete, Harley, 2055). Thanks to advances in nanobot technology, it is now possible to transform any member physically into the opposite sex. Our study examines the feasibility of addressing Earth Force's sexual imbalance issues through the gender reassignment of male members. Our theory posits that some members becoming female while enjoying intensive, state of the art therapy will lead to a more sensitive and inclusive mindset among all service members.

The following report will focus on Subject 7, detailing our observations, excerpts from her sessions with her support personnel and testimony from associates. Our intent is to paint as complete a picture as possible of how her gender transformation impacted her psyche and to offer speculation as to the utility of deploying mass transformations.
