

Bigger Beth

by Pandoza

“Well this is cuuuute.”

Beth stopped and got down onto her knees. She was on the outskirts of a little suburban street. Laid out in front of her, a collection of what looked like very fancy houses sat like an assorted box of chocolates. Each was surrounded by a large lawns, with the odd swimming pool studding the grass like blue shots. Most of the houses looked no larger than a purse to the gigantic Aussie, who was fighting the urge to reach out and pluck one up in her hands to examine it more closely.

“No, no, be gentle now...” Beth whispered to herself as she slowly lay down on the ground between houses. As she positioned herself the ground cracked and ruptured, and a small tree was partially uprooted by her arm before she withdrew it to lean on. This was much better; getting her face closer to observe the tiny settlement in its natural state.

Just then she noticed a car coming down the street toward her. Somehow the driver seemed not to have noticed her. The driver of a van definitely had as it span around and started screeching away. Without thinking, her mischievous side took over and she slapped her palm down on the road in advance of the car, quickly withdrawing it. The shockwave threw a van up in the air and onto its side as the car swerved wildly across the road and flipped onto its roof. Observing these tiny things crashing in what seemed almost slow motion was hilarious, but she did become a bit concerned for the drivers. Beth breathed a sigh of relief as before she could do anything a tiny man crawled out of the window of the upturned car. From her perspective he didn't seem hurt, just a bit shocked. And possibly a bit cute. If he wasn't the size of a gummy bear. At this point she noticed that she had a bit of nip slip. It seemed the gummy man had noticed too and had frozen. She smirked and let him look before she moved her hand and with a slow, exaggerated motion pushed her index finger down into the little car, squishing it flat.

“Oops. Total write off. Guess you have to stay with me now, I can give you a ride.” She giggled and then gasped. “Fuck I hope there was nobody else in there!”