

SEA HAG LAIR

BACKGROUND

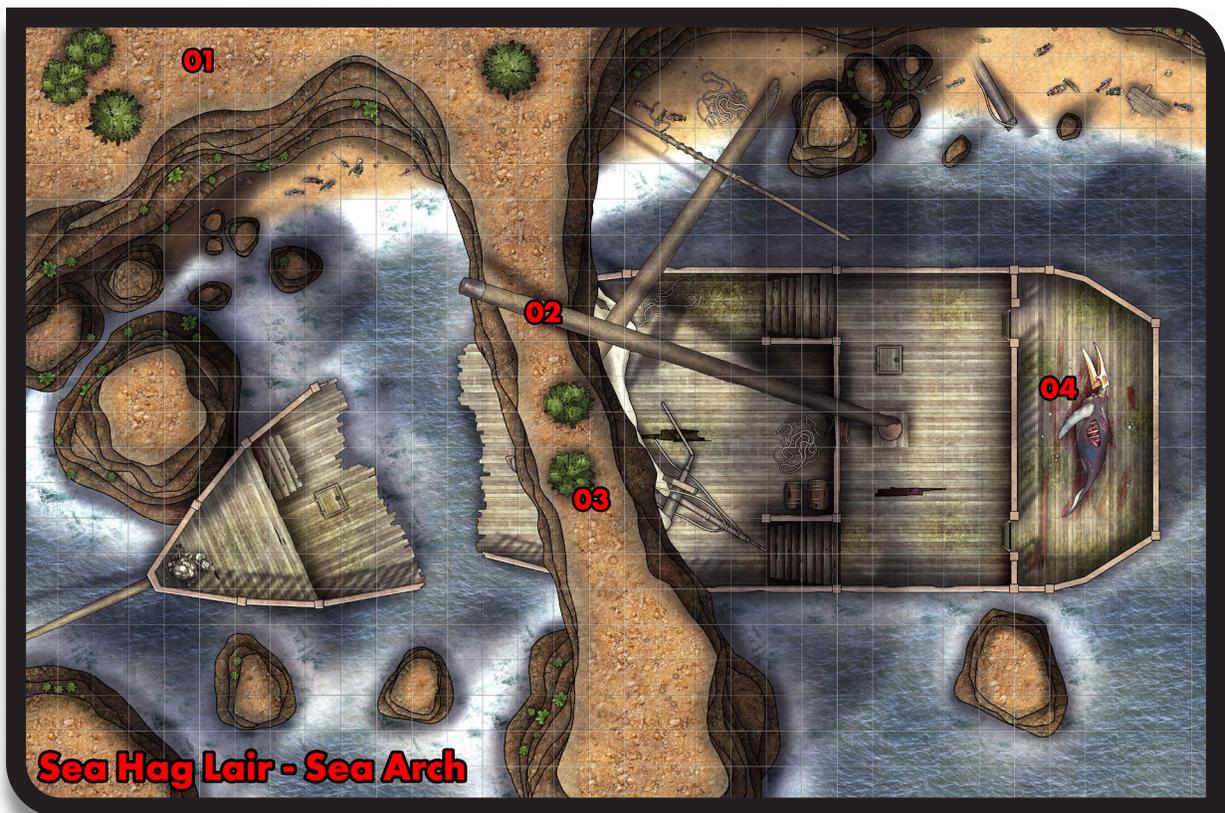

The hull of this old ship is wedged beneath a naturally formed sea arch, known to many local fishermen as a landmark to avoid. However, there are rumours that the vessel was carrying a cargo of valuables before meeting its end. While there have been attempts to retrieve the treasure, none have ended well and those few that were able to return spoke only of the overwhelming stench, not the glitter of gold.

GRID SIZE

GRID 34x22 (300DPI)

VTT 4760x3080 (140DPI)

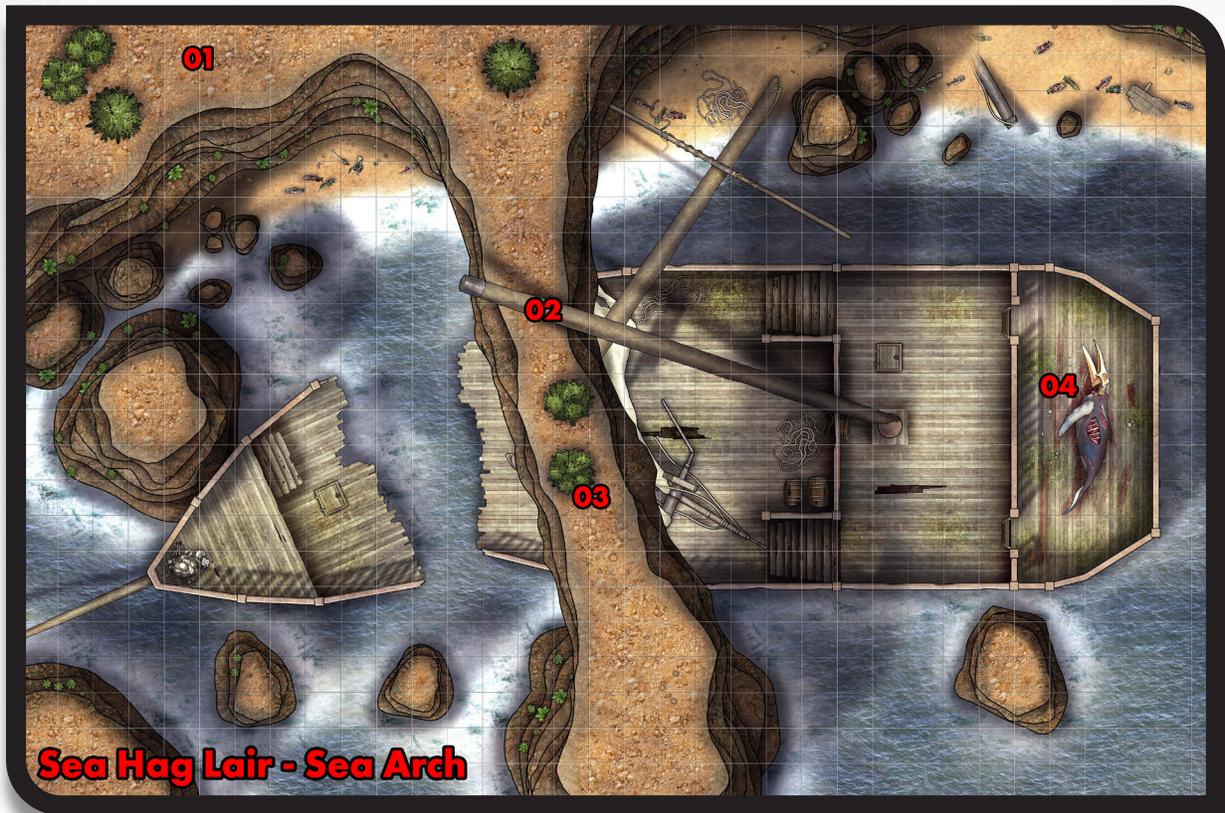

PRINT A1/ANSI D

ROOM	NAME	DESCRIPTION
01	Mainland	The clifftop overlooks the ocean. Out at the end of a peninsula, the horizon is unbroken in three directions.
02	Broken Mast	The ships mast has snapped off and fallen onto the arch. This could offer a safe way down for the more nimble.
03	Sea Arch	These formations are usually a site of natural beauty, but the eerie whispers on the wind and powerful brine-like smell make this an unpleasant spot for a picnic.
04	Quarterdeck	A rotting whale carcass may be the source of the smell, but its placement on the upper deck does not seem accidental.

ROOM	NAME	DESCRIPTION
05	Main Deck	Slippery with algae and rough with barnacles, the now sloped deck provides poor footing.
02	Captains Quarters	It seems someone or something else has been calling this wreck home. The logs and shipping charts were likely left here by the previous occupant, but the ritualistic animal skulls feel like a new addition.
03	Beach	This narrow strip of sand is littered with dead fish, as though nothing can live in the water here.

Sea Hag Lair - Sea Arch

ROOM	NAME	DESCRIPTION
08	Flooded Chambers	About half of the lower deck of the ship is fully submerged
09	Crews Quarters	The hammocks would have previously belonged to the ship's crew, but something else has been sleeping in them lately.
10	Cargo Hold	The promised treasure seems to be here, along with a strange assortment of items and trinkets collected from the bottom of the sea.
11	Underwater Caves	The rock below the coastline has been eroded away creating dark hiding spots, hidden from above.

